INDIAN AGRICULTURE

Post-Independence, the Indian agriculture transformed from a food-scarce to food-exporting country primarily due to science led innovations that caused multifold increase in the agricultural production from 135 million tons in 1950/ 51 to over 1300 million tons in 2021/22 in spite of increasing abiotic and biotic ...

In India which is an agro-based country, Farmers are the most important people for our survival according to me. They do hardwork from morning to afternoon not just for themselves but to feed us too

Rain, scorching heat, dealing with intense ploughing, cultivating, harvesting etc , farmers are the heroes of the agriculture and food sector according to me. But unfortunately, hardly people care about their well being. Its heart breaking when farmers end their lives when they cannot have the money they deserve .

Over the past few decades, the manufacturing and services sectors have increasingly contributed to the growth of the economy, while the agriculture sector's contribution has decreased from more than 50% of GDP in the 1950s to 15.4% in 2015-16 (at constant prices).

Before the 1970s India was not self-sufficient in producing food grains and imports a large sum of food gains from other countries. But, when our imports started blackmailing us then Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri found an alternative and motivated our farmers.

Modern farmers feel like their neighbors don't understand the work they do, or the immense and unique pressures that come with the farming profession. Loneliness among farmers also displayed a connection to mental health problems such as depression and anxiety.

Farmers are the backbone of Indian society. Also, this is a sensitive topic that needs to be handled carefully. The people of India are engaged in a variety of profession but agriculture or farming is the main occupation in India.

The condition of Indian farmers is very poor. Around 80% of the farmer's population consists of those farmers who own less than 1-hectare land or 1-2 hectare. Besides, agriculture provides employment to nearly 50% but still contributes 15% to the GDP.
